Entrepreneur to fund university research

23 Nov 2009

Youtravel founder John Kent has had a tourism institute named after him at Bournemouth University.

The John Kent Institute in Tourism will support a series of PhD studentships with the aim of establishing an internationally significant programme of tourism research within BU's School of Services Management.

The school is respected globally as a centre of excellence for tourism study and research and is home to the International Centre for Tourism and Hospitality Research (ICTHR), one of the leading research centres of its kind in the world.

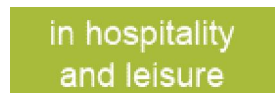

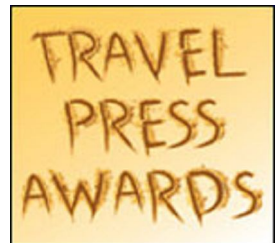

The new institute will complement the work of this centre by attracting high calibre PhD students to BU.

Kent, who set up Youtravel, Aquis Hotels and Resorts, MedHotels.com and TravelBargains.com, said: 'I am delighted to support the innovative research that is undertaken at Bournemouth University in Tourism.

'I have been particularly interested in the further development of research in Tourism Marketing and e-Tourism for which the University has developed an enviable international reputation.'
